

Fallacy of Equivocation

Where you manipulatively make a point by playing upon words that have multiple meanings.

Example:

“Vote for the Socialist Party – and remember that the heart beats to the left.”

- A German politician

How is the politician using his point about the heart beating to the left as an argument for the Socialist Party? Note that the words “heart” and “left” each have two very separate meanings.